

Creed

Since the appearance of human life in Europe, the Danube, as the dominant river of Europe's central-west region, has determined the area's economic structure and everyday life of people living along the coast.

As a major geo-economic organizing force, the European Union's Danube Strategy - foreshadowed by the Baltic Cooperation - allows the riverside societies, to set new common objectives and define new dimensions of cooperation through their advocacy organizations, linked by the historic Danube Region.

The Danube Chambers of Commerce Association wishes to be one of the new dimensions of cooperation, which due to the chamber system's historically established traditional advocacy and representation structure, aims to enforce the common representation and advocacy of the enterprises operating and entrepreneurs habitant along the Danube.

Historically it emerged that in line with the Danube's direction of flow, beside the geographical a social and economical inclination also has developed. To equate the development inequalities should be one of the most important objectives to be accomplished by the DCCA along the examples of the distant and the nearer past and today's economic and geopolitical situation.

The Association's philosophy is to create a single platform of economic opportunities enhancing the economic co-operation, strengthening the cohesion between the entrepreneurs and enterprises operating in different countries of the macro-region, along horizontal principles.

The founders of the Association deeply believe, that the economic cohesion of the Danube area brings sustainable economic development for the future generations in the direct vicinity of the Danube.

If the Chamber's Association could contribute any way in the realization of this vision, it has fulfilled the intention of the founders.
